Friday the 13th is allegedly unlucky, but with all the spooky events lined up, it feels like the date redeemed itself. Along with other events listed on Metro's website, The Other Side: A Psychological Séance opens for a limited two-week run. WHITE HOUSE CHIEF OF STAFF NOT QUITTING

I White House chief of staff John Kelly slapped down rumors that he was about to resign or be fired and said his push to bring more order to the West Wing does not extend to controlling President Donald Trump or his social media habits. In a rare appearance before reporters, the retired general sought to project an aura of calm in a White House that has been criticized as chaotic. "Unless things change, I'm not quitting, I'm not getting fired and I don't think I'll fire anyone tomorrow," he said. Kelly replaced Trump's first chief of staff, Reince Priebus, after a tumultuous first six months in office and sought to bring order to an often chaotic operation at the White House. Under his watch, Trump parted ways with other top officials, while new restrictions were set to streamline meetings and material for the president.

WHITE NATIONALISTS SUED OVER PROTEST VIOLENCE

2 Eleven people have sued white nationalists whose rally in Charlottesville, Virginia, turned deadly this summer, saying they suffered emotional and physical trauma from protesters' threats and violence. The federal lawsuit filed in Charlottesville late on Wednesday seeks damages from 25 white nationalist individuals and groups alleged to be involved in the Aug. 12 protest, including activist Richard Spencer. It also requests a court order banning them from staging similar rallies. Those named in the suit went to Charlottesville "to terrorize its residents, commit acts of violence, and use the town as a backdrop to showcase for the media and the nation a neo-nationalist agenda," the suit said. Spencer and one of the groups, the Traditionalist Worker Party, did not respond to requests for comment on Thursday.

DHS SECRETARY NOMINEE

3 President Donald Trump shakes the hand of White House Deputy Chief of Staff Kirstjen Nielsen during a nomination announcement at the East Room of the White House on Thursday in Washington, D.C. President Trump has nominated Nielsen to be the next homeland security secretary, the position that has been left vacant by Chief of Staff John Kelly.

SIX INJURED IN ESCAPE ATTEMPT AT NC PRISON

4 An escape attempt involving fires at a North Carolina prison left several employees injured on Thursday and authorities placed the facility on lockdown, officials said. The situation at the Pasquotank Correctional Institution in Elizabeth City was under control, the state Department of Public Safety said on Twitter, less than two hours after sending out an alert on social media about the incident. The fires were set in the sewing plant at the prison and have been extinguished, the public safety agency said. Few other details were immediately available about the incident at the prison in the northeast part of the state. Sentara Albemarle Medical Center in Elizabeth City received six patients injured in the incident, the hospital said in a statement. It did not provide any details on their conditions.

NEW HACK, EQUIFAX TAKES DOWN HELP PAGE

5 Equifax has taken one of its customer help web pages offline as its security team looks into reports of another potential cyber breach at the credit reporting company, which recently disclosed a hack that compromised the sensitive information of 145.5 million people. The move came after an independent security analyst on Wednesday found part of Equifax's website was under the control of attackers trying to trick visitors into installing fraudulent Adobe Flash updates that could infect computers with malware. "We are aware of the situation identified on the equifax.com website in the credit report assistance link," spokesman Wyatt Jefferies said. "Our IT and security teams are looking into this matter, and out of an abundance of caution have temporarily taken this page offline."

A study lists the most aggressive cities for driving. GETTY IMAGES

New Yorkers are most road rage-y drivers in US, according to study

We asked an anger-management therapist why we're so triggered behind the wheel.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
@NikkiMMascali
nikki.mascali@metro.us

New Yorkers have a bad rap for being angry and aggressive, but what happens when you put a New Yorker behind the wheel? More of the same, according to a new study.

Drivers in our fair city are the worst in the United States when it comes to road rage, German auto-parts retailer Kfzteile24 found when compiling its "Best and Worst Cities to Drive" list.

The company looked at factors such as congestion levels, fuel and parking costs, road quality, public-transportation options and road rage, and also polled 1,000 drivers in 100 cities across the globe about driver aggression and road violence.

New Yorkers are more road rage-y than drivers in Miami, Los Angeles, Chicago and Boston — but at least we came in ninth across the globe. The overall top spot for road rage is St. Petersburg, Russia, with Bogota, Colombia, at No. 2.

So how can New Yorkers be as chill behind the wheel as Seattle, the least aggressive driving city in the U.S. according to Kfzteile24's data? Metro looked to Rachel McDavid, a city-based marriage and family therapist specializing in anger management and individual, couples and family therapy, for answers.

Does it surprise you that New York has the most road rage-y drivers?
It doesn't surprise me, but I guess it does surprise me on one level because we're such a pedestrian city.

Do you come across road rage with your clients?
Yes, and I think what makes [road rage] unique is that we're inside our own little world inside our vehicle, so there's two things. One is that you can kill and be killed, so that heightens people's anxiety and danger, so the stakes are higher. Also, we live in our own little bubble inside our vehicle, so we don't see the other people, so it's easier to minimize.

Why is it so aggravating when a driver cuts us off?
When someone cuts you off, you notice that immediately comes the adrenaline because it's frightening. People feel enraged and scared at the same time because an accident could have happened.

How can you keep a road rage episode from escalating?
You need to watch your body and what's happening in your body. Are you feeling tense? When I work with people in anger management, I have them focus on what goes on in their body right before they lash out.

What sort of reactions should we watch out for?
People have a variety of responses like sweaty palms, tight chest, jaw, shoulders, a complete rush, heart starts palpating really fast. ... When you start to pay more attention to that, you can then start implementing deep, slow belly breaths with a deep inhale and a slower exhale. That's going to slow down the nervous system. If our body's agitated, our mind is constantly going to try to make sense of it.

Can passengers do anything to defuse the situation?
That's a more difficult thing. Sometimes I recommend people sit in the backseat. They won't, but there are people who have a lot of anxiety in not driving, that are anxious in cars. People in the car letting the driver know what they don't like is not helpful. It creates more stress for the driver — and more anger and impatience.

NY attorney general challenges Donald Trump's third travel ban

A.G. Schneiderman and other attorneys general are still opposing the Trump administration's travel bans.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

New York Attorney General Eric Schneiderman is once again challenging President Trump's travel ban.

Schneiderman has filed a motion for a temporary restraining order against Trump's third travel ban, along with attorneys general from Washington, California, Maryland, Massachusetts and Oregon, his office announced Thursday.

Schneiderman has previously helped oppose Trump's earlier travel bans, arguing that they were discriminatory and anti-Muslim.

The Supreme Court previously planned to hear two challenges to the second travel ban, but it canceled those arguments following the release of a third travel ban, according to Schneiderman's office. On Tuesday, Oct. 10, the Supreme Court dismissed one of two pending cases, calling an earlier version of the ban moot because it expired.

However, the attorneys general believe that the third travel ban is not free of the discriminations present in the first two and would continue to harm families, institutions and economies.

"President Trump's third attempt at a travel ban is still a Muslim ban by another name — attempting to further the same discriminatory and unconstitutional goals as his first and second bans," Schneiderman said in a statement. "This latest ban even applies to people who pose absolutely no plausible terrorist threat, such as young children and grandparents hoping to visit their relatives in the U.S."

The third ban attempt, announced Sept. 24, prohibits those from Iran, Libya, Syria, Yemen, Somalia, Chad and North Korea from entering the U.S. The order also affects a small number of Venezuelan government officials and their families but does not bar anyone else in that country from traveling to the U.S., according to the attorneys general.

This proclamation is even more damaging than the previous bans, the attorneys general say, because it mentions no end date and "almost entirely foreclose[s] entry into the United States by nationals of the designated countries."

"Since January, our coalition of attorneys general have successfully beat back these unconstitutional bans," Schneiderman said. "The Trump administration's continued attempts to discriminate would undermine our states' families, institutions, and businesses — and we'll continue to fight back."

What Trump's executive order on healthcare means for you

New rules will allow people to go over state lines for insurance coverage.

MEAGAN MORRIS
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

On Thursday morning, President Trump signed an executive order to "save the American people from the nightmare of Obamacare" by gutting some of the rules of the Affordable Care Act.

Under the Trump healthcare executive order, small businesses — and possibly individuals — can band together to form associations that make it easier for them to go across state lines to purchase healthcare plans exempt from Obamacare requirements that all health plans must cover essential health benefits.

The new rules — that

come just days after Trump changed another Obamacare mandate requiring companies to pay for birth control — will "create tremendous competition" among insurance providers to drive down premium costs, creating a marketplace where insurance companies will be "begging for your business," he said.

Premiums for plans under Obamacare average $378 a month, according to eHealth, an insurance marketplace. That's an 18 percent increase from 2016.

The executive order also directs the Departments of Health and Human Services, Labor and the Treasury to "increase choice and access to lower-cost and higher quality healthcare options," Trump said during a news conference.

The executive order won't take effect for several months, according to some estimates — and there will likely be legal challenges — so current insurance rules will stay put for the time being. Critics say the new rules will create more problems because they take away state oversight on insurance plans, allowing them to provide leaner coverage.

"President Trump's healthcare executive order may seem a little complicated so let me break it down: It's sabotage," Sen. Tim Kaine of Virginia wrote on Twitter before the news conference.

"It would allow cheap low-quality plans onto the market that could discriminate against people with pre-existing conditions, seniors, women," the former vice presidential candidate added. "It aims to push healthy people onto junk plans, leaving only the sick or at-risk on ACA plans — essentially destroying the insurance market."

Discoveries have been made in the search for a cure to the common cold. ISTOCK

Is a cure for the common cold finally coming?

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control estimates that most of us suffer through two or three colds a year — and we do suffer because there's no singular medication or vaccination that can cure the common cold.

But it might happen. Research published earlier this year in the journal Nature Communications said that new antiviral drugs that fight against the common cold could be designed within the next 10 years.

For the research, scientists looked at the genetic material of human parechovirus, a virus that is similar to the common cold. They then used mathematical modeling and other research to find that the virus relies on a "hidden code" to replicate across its genome.

"The coding works like the cogwheels in a Swiss watch. We now need a drug that has the same effect as pouring sand into the watch; every part of the viral mechanism could be disabled," Professor Peter Stockley at the University of Leeds told CNN.

NYPD reviews additional complaints against former mogul Harvey Weinstein

The NYPD is looking into additional complaints concerning Harvey Weinstein following multiple reports of sexual harassment that women faced at the hands of the film producer.

This week, a story in the New Yorker detailed a 10-month investigation during which 13 women said that Weinstein sexually harassed or assaulted them between the 1990s and 2015.

The bombshell article included audio recorded during an NYPD sting operation in 2015 in which Weinstein admits to groping model Ambra Battilana Gutierrez.

The story followed a previous report by the New York Times published Oct. 5 in which it reported that Weinstein reached at least eight settlements with women who alleged sexual harassment and unwanted physical contact.

Now, the NYPD is encouraging anyone else who may have information about Weinstein's behaviors to come forward.

"Based on information referenced in published news reports the NYPD is conducting a review to determine if there are any additional complaints relating to the Harvey Weinstein matter," Detective Sophia Mason said in a statement to Metro. "No filed complaints have been identified as of this time and as always, the NYPD encourages anyone who may have information pertaining to this matter to call the CrimeStoppers Hotline at 1-800-577-TIPS."

The New Yorker article also included the story from Lucia Evans, a former aspiring actress who said that Weinstein forced her to perform oral sex on him in 2004. The NYPD is looking into allegations from "a 2004 incident," according to Newsweek.

NYPD's move also comes after Manhattan DA Cyrus Vance's office defended the decision not to press charges against Weinstein in 2015, following the sting.

Vance's office reportedly accepted a $10,000 donation from David Boies, an attorney for Weinstein, in August, only a few months after his office decided not to press charges, according to CNN. On Wednesday, Vance's office defended the decision not to prosecute Weinstein, denying that any donations influenced his decisions.

The Other Side: A Psychological Séance to spook 13 (un)lucky guests

Are you ready to face your fears? Let mentalist Jason Suran bridge the gap between our world and The Other Side.

KIMBERLY M. AQUILINA
@KimESTAqui
kimberly.aquilina@metro.us

You won't know the exact location until you buy your ticket. Once you buy your ticket, you've already decided to confront your fears. It'll all be OK, because 13 of you will face The Other Side during a séance together.

Just don't break the circle, mentalist Jason Suran warns.

Starting on Friday the 13th at 7:30 p.m. and running for a limited two-week period leading to Halloween, The Other Side: A Psychological Séance is a microtheater event calling upon the Victorian era...and spirits.

Each night, 13 guests will meet at a private residence in Williamsburg and enjoy a complimentary cocktail half hour and hors d'oeuvres courtesy of GEM&BOLT mezcal + damiana.

"I think people can expect to play a bigger role in the night's events than they may be used to when they go to see a show," Suran said. "A séance is all about building connection and facing fear."

After the guests — looking dapper in their formal attire — mingle, Suran will start you on your spooky journey.

"The show began as an exploration of the history of the séance and what drew people to it in the first place," Suran explained. "I've always been interested in the methods and theatrics of the psychic world and wanted to see if I could use my skills as a mentalist to replicate a Victorian séance for a modern audience."

Rather than a serious, religious séance, Suran focuses on the Victorian ceremony components: spectacle, mind-reading and basic "Wait, what just happened?" brain-bending moments.

Anything can happen when attempting to cross the veil. Or is it all in your mind?

If you are ready to face your fears, this is what you need to know about the séance.

Guests must be over the age of 21. Address disclosed with ticket purchase. Tickets are $130 for the two-hour experience with group booking options available.

In addition, The Other Side will debut a private VIP-exclusive séance installation as a guest collaborator at The Illuminati Ball at The Weylin on Friday, Oct. 20. Check the website for more info.

The Other Side is produced by Adam Rei Siegel and creative consulting by Todd Robbins and Kevin Kapinos, scenic design by Tanvi Malik and a custom art installation by Jennifer Mien Mien Lin.

NYC ATTACK PLOT

Pakistani-American faces extradition hearing on NYC attack plot

A Pakistani-American man accused of plotting attacks in New York City for ISIS is scheduled to appear at an extradition hearing in a Pakistani court on Friday.

Talha Haroon, 19, was arrested in Pakistan in 2016 after U.S. authorities identified him as one of three men, along with a Canadian citizen and a man from the Philippines, planning attacks on Times Square and the subway.

Haroon's lawyer says his client is innocent and termed the investigation a sting operation carried out by an investigating officer motivated by career advancement.

"The FBI projected this as a high-level story, but these people don't have the qualifications to kill a monkey," said defense lawyer Idrees Ashraf.

"According to the criminal complaint, the FBI agent communicated with Talha online and has said he was active in ISIS, but no proof of militant links has been provided," Ashraf said.

Prosecutors said they expect Haroon to be extradited to face the charges, which include conspiracy to commit acts of terrorism and to support a terrorist organization.

If convicted, the accused face a maximum sentence of life in prison. REUTERS

NYC VS. THE JUSTICE DEPT.

Four US 'sanctuary cities' may be violating law: Attorney General Jeff Sessions

The U.S. Justice Department singled out four cities and a county on Thursday for allegedly having so-called "sanctuary policies" that may violate a federal law that says local governments cannot limit information sharing with U.S. immigration officials.

The department said New York City, New Orleans, Philadelphia and Cook County in Illinois, along with its largest city Chicago,

"have preliminarily been found" to have policies that violate the law. It is giving those jurisdictions until Oct. 27 to provide evidence demonstrating compliance.

If the government finds the cities and county are violating the statute that calls for information sharing with federal immigration officials, it says it could cut federal funds for law enforcement.

The determinations came after the Justice Department earlier in the year had asked several local jurisdictions to detail their compliance with the law in order to make a determination about their eligibility for certain federal grants.

Attorney General Jeff Sessions said that the cities still in the crosshairs "adopt the view that the protection of criminal aliens is more important than the protection of law-abiding citizens"

The sanctuary jurisdictions say they are following the law, which says local authorities cannot prevent information exchange with federal immigration agents about people's immigration status. Seth Stein, a spokesman for New York City, said the mayor's office was "prepared to fight to protect critical public safety funding."

Some of the disputes concern the jurisdictions' compliance with U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement "detainer" requests, sent to local authorities when ICE wants to hold people in custody for 48 hours and more so that immigration officials can pick them up. REUTERS

National No Bra Day aims to raise breast cancer awareness

Ready to go braless for a good cause?

LINNEA ZIELINSKI
@MetroNewYork
letters@metro.us

Get ready to let the ladies loose, because National No Bra Day is here.

National No Bra Day happens to fall on the witchiest day of the year this year, Friday, Oct. 13. (The holiday always falls on Oct. 13.) We guess that's fitting since we can see witches leaning into a bohemian look, but the bigger connection is the scary thing National No Bra Day aims to promote awareness of.

National No Bra Day promotes breast cancer awareness and raises money for research to fight the disease, and it falls right smack in the middle of Breast Cancer Awareness Month. National No Bra Day is also a way to show solidarity with those who have fought breast cancer.

Follow your work dress code, whatever it may be and don't feel the need to go bra-free if you don't feel comfortable. The day is mostly marked on social media, where people can share pictures in solidarity and can easily go braless before throwing on the supportive lingerie and heading out to work. People are encouraged to wear something purple if they're not comfortable going braless in public.

But you can — and probably should — book an appointment for a mammogram, which the American Cancer Society suggests women between the ages of 45 and 54 should get annually. (If you're 55 or older, that suggestion drops to one mammogram every two years.) We know no one likes going to the doctor, but a mammogram can find or detect breast cancer in some cases before a patient or doctor can feel anything through a breast exam. Catching any sign of cancer early is a critical leg up in treatment.

If you already got your annual mammogram, and you want to help support the fight against breast cancer, you can make a donation to the American Cancer Society or Susan G. Komen for the Cure. You can find and add social media posts to the buzz about the day using #NoBraDay or #NationalNoBraDay.

National No Bra Day takes place every Oct. 13. GETTY IMAGES

Thurgood Marshall's superhero roots

Josh Gad and Chadwick Boseman talk to Metro about a movie for everyone.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
@MetroNewYork
gregory.wakeman@metro.us

Despite being obviously timely, "Marshall" actors Chadwick Boseman and Josh Gad are reticent to talk up the film's importance. Instead, the pair were quick to insist the number of other reasons why they were initially attracted to the film.

"I did it because I enjoyed the script and enjoyed who I got to work with," Boseman explains. "I wanted to work with Reggie [Hudlin, director] and I wanted to tell the story of Thurgood Marshall. Yes, he's important. But I also think he's a cool dude. He was cool for what he did. He was cool because he fought for justice. He was cool because he was courageous, arrogant and selfless. When you start talking about how important movies are, it's like, 'You have to see the movie!' But you don't want to see it. And I knew this was a movie people would want to see."

Josh Gad, who plays lawyer Sam Friedman to Boseman's Marshall, adds, "I think it's important without being self-righteous. And that's what I really respect about it. This really is a movie for everybody. At the same time it is covering this incredible period of history and this incredible journey before he is the man in the robes. It's the origin movie of a superhero. It takes place in 1941, but it could just as easily take place in 2017. There's something eerily familiar about it."

What stood out for you about the script?

Boseman told us, "Biopics is what people pitch to me. And when I was told to read the script I was like, 'This is my third. I don't know,' but when I eventually read it I just saw a Western. This is Marshall coming into town to implement justice. I saw a buddy, not a cop movie — a buddy attorney movie. I saw a who-dunnit. I could forget that it was about Thurgood Marshall."

What's unique about making a biopic?

"I feel the pressure initially," said Boseman. "Once I've taken it on I'm somehow able to push that pressure off and then dive into the process and do the part. I always try to find the things that are human and that I can identify with. Then I look for things that aren't like me and that I need to really hone in on. It's making sure that I have a plethora of information that's available to me."

Does Hollywood have a responsibility to tell stories like these?

"To a certain extent," says Gad. "One of the things that makes art so powerful is that it can be a reflection of the times and humanity and of who we are at any given time. Now there are definitely issues to be reflected back at us so we can have the difficult discussions. It's tricky, though, because you never want to be preachy about it. You always want to be respectful and do your job, which is to simultaneously entertain while giving the audience something to chew on. So I think that if you achieve that you are ahead of the game."

Did you speak to the family of Thurgood Marshall?

"I decided to join the film after I received a letter from John Marshall (Thurgood's son) saying he wanted me to take the role," says Boseman. "That was instrumental and it broke down some barriers. Because part of my reservation was that I thought I didn't look like Thurgood. At that point me and Reggie discussed the appearance of the character. 'Do we change the complexion of the character? Should I wear a moustache?' We decided that stuff wasn't important, and we decided to try and bring the essence of the man out of me."

"Marshall" will be in movie theaters on October 13.

"The Meyerowitz Stories"

Director: Noah Baumbach
Stars: Adam Sandler, Ben Stiller

● ● ● ● ●

Adam Sandler might just be a decent actor after all. For every "Punch-Drunk Love," "Reign Over Me" and "Funny People," there are half a dozen more like "Just Go With It," "Grown Ups" and "Jack and Jill." But "The Meyerowitz Stories" may be the ultimate proof of the acting heights that Sandler can reach, as he embodies the pent-up aggression, frustrations and indomitable spirit of Danny Meyerowitz in a hilarious fashion.

Sandler is the finest example of writer and director Noah Baumbach's pitch-perfect casting. Wry and observant while just about avoiding any pretentious pitfalls, "The Meyerowitz Stories" is ultimately so delightful that it rivals "Okja" as the best Netflix release to date.

GREGORY WAKEMAN

"Goodbye Christopher Robin"

Director: Simon Curtis
Stars: Domhnall Gleeson, Margot Robbie

● ● ● ● ●

I wasn't expecting to like "Goodbye Christopher Robin."

Halfway into the drama, I was only pleasantly entertained. But while the movie spends a bunch of time establishing its characters, setting and relationships, it's not until the last hour that screenwriters Frank Cottrell-Boyce and Simon Vaughan really sink their teeth into the subject matter, probing the instant success of the books in a surprisingly powerful and emotional manner. "Goodbye Christopher Robin" forgoes any subtlety, going in hard on its dramatic cues, but Curtis is so lean and focused on the heart, intent and themes of the film that it builds into a captivating and truly touching experience. GW

Domhnall Gleeson conveys the emotional heft of the biopic deftly. FOX SEARCHLIGHT

Prejudice against African-Americans and Jews is at the forefront of this stunning biopic on the life of Thurgood Marshall. And it's buoyed by an absolutely incredible cast. Those of you that are somehow yet to be charmed or convinced by Chadwick Boseman will have no more excuses after "Marshall," as he is a force of nature, while his patter and partnership with Gad is particularly delightful. Reginald Hudlin's sleek direction meshes perfectly with Boseman's confidence, too, and helps to glide over the film's shortcomings, which ultimately makes for a lively and more than palatable experience. GW

Lalas comments on state of USMNT

The US Soccer legend and current analyst is never afraid to hold back when it comes to his former squad.

KRISTIAN DYER
@KristianRDyer
sports@metro.us

After an outspoken, yet eloquent statement several weeks ago in which he called out the United States men's national soccer team, Alexi Lalas is standing by his tough words while also standing by the program.

Lalas, a member of two World Cup teams and a star in the nascent days of MLS, took to task the current U.S. team following a series of disappointing World Cup qualifiers in September. Now, following the team's failure to qualify for next summer's World Cup, even more credence is given to the critique from Lalas.

Hardly a point that he made can be countered.

His famous line referring to the national team as "tattooed millionaires" resonates now after a heartless performance from the United States in a 2-1 loss at Trinidad & Tobago that saw their World Cup dreams erode.

"I think throughout this qualifying campaign in several games, we saw a lack of consistency. I think really what we saw was while a very talented group of individuals, not a very good team. It lacked cohesion, it lacked leadership, it lacked personality," Lalas told Metro. "That's not to say that it's not a talented group of players, probably one of the most talented groups of players we've had. It didn't translate into a team that took their opportunities, recognized their opportunities and played with a sense of urgency and responsibility. And that's when I took the team to task a couple of weeks ago, it was systematic. I didn't tell them anything they didn't know."

Alexi Lalas, one of the most recognizable faces in US soccer, spoke with Metro about the national team. GETTY IMAGES

Lalas made his original comments prior to an MLS match on Fox Sports 1 where he is a popular analyst and commentator.

But while critical of the team and their response to adversity, La-las clearly doesn't think that the program will be down for too long.

A member of the World Cup teams in 1994 and 1998, Lalas was the first American to play in Italy's famed Serie A. He's also been a general manager of the New York Red Bulls and the Los Angeles Galaxy.

With attention now turning to the 2022

World Cup and how to right the national team ahead of qualifying for that tournament, Lalas thinks the program will turn things around. While a generation of players such as Tim Howard and Clint Dempsey are now fading into the background, a new generation exists.

Christian Pulisic, the teenager who wears the

No. 10 for the U.S. and stars for Borussia Dortmund, will be joined by the likes of Red Bulls midfielder Tyler Adams, Chelsea's Matt Miazga and Manchester City's Erik Palmer-Brown very soon. This could be a very talented team.

When asked if the U.S. will qualify for the World Cup in the next cycle, he clearly said yes.

"Oh yeah and it will be glorious. If there's one thing I know about the American soccer community, we fight, you know? Not too corny about it but we will dust ourselves, step back and ask the questions that need to be asked and more importantly answer," Lalas said.

"I think we will come back bigger and better and stronger. It's not something we wanted or needed but as long as it is here, let's use it as an opportunity for change that needs to be made. But not just change for change sake."

Aries Make plans or arrangements to do something that is fun, entertaining or that will encourage you to make better life choices.

Taurus Situations will escalate if you fall short of what's expected of you. Don't let work or domestic responsibilities clash. Refuse to share secrets with a colleague.

Gemini Handle your financial and business affairs carefully. Overspending or making unrealistic promises will leave you in a sticky situation. Offer creative solutions.

Cancer Your kindness will lead to trouble if you trust a smooth-talking individual. Put your time and cash into personal gains and romancing someone you love.

Leo You'll face emotional controversy at home or when dealing with institutions, government agencies or authority figures. Stick to the rules to avoid a precarious position.

Virgo Don't be tempted to take part in something just because you want to impress someone or be near him or her. Take a pass, but be there to help when things fall apart.

Libra Don't overanalyze. Live in the moment and deal with matters as they arise. Don't make life more complicated than it is. Keep life simple and your goals reasonable.

Scorpio An unrealistic promise will put you in a compromising position. Use common sense when making decisions that could influence your reputation or ability to advance.

Sagittarius Simplify matters by living within your means and only taking on what you can handle. Underestimating the cost involved in a project will leave you in a bad position.

Capricorn You or someone you are dealing with will overreact. Protect important relationships and do your best to keep the peace. A physical challenge will ease stress.

Aquarius Put your passwords and anything else that matters in a safe place. Someone will take advantage of you if you are too gullible about your personal business.

Pisces Money and emotions won't mix. A deal is only as good as the work you are willing to put in to make it succeed. Take positive action. EUGENIA LAST
